

Golden Hour Wellness Colorado

Website Handoff Guide · Prepared for Shayla Martinez-O'Brien · September 2026

One thing worth knowing up front: almost everything below is tied together through Google sign-in, using the Google account you created and shared with Chad — GHWCO2026@gmail.com. That single account is what authenticates Cloudflare, Search Console, Analytics, and the admin login flow, so it's the one set of credentials that matters most to keep track of.

Golden Hour Wellness Colorado is now live on its own professional platform — fully independent of Squarespace. This guide is your reference for everything about how the site works, how to update it yourself, who to call when something needs a developer, and how to make the most of it for getting found by new clients.

You don't need to read this cover to cover. Skim it once, then come back to the relevant section when you need it.

Your website at a glance

Live at www.goldenhourwellnesscolorado.com · hosted on Cloudflare Pages · content edited at /admin · built and maintained by Chad Moravec.

How everything fits together

Five services work together to run your site and practice. None of them require you to know code — the two you'll actually touch day to day are TinaCMS (to edit words on the site) and Acuity/Thrizer (already familiar from before).

Service	What it does	You need it for
GitHub	Stores every version of your website's code, like a very thorough backup with full history.	Nothing directly — Chad manages this.
Cloudflare Pages	Hosts the live site. Automatically republishes within about a minute of any change.	Nothing directly, but this is where the domain and SSL certificate live.
TinaCMS (/admin)	The editor you use to change text on the site — no code involved.	Updating the homepage, FAQ, group cohort details, and writing Journal (blog) posts.
EmailJS	Delivers the contact form on your Contact page straight to your inbox.	Nothing directly — it runs silently in the background.
Domain (Squarespace)	Where goldenhourwellnesscolorado.com is registered and renews each year.	Renewing the domain annually (auto-renew is on).

Acuity Scheduling and Thrizer (your benefits-check tool) are unchanged — both were already independent of Squarespace, so nothing about how you use them is different.

Editing your site yourself

Go to www.goldenhourwellnesscolorado.com/admin and sign in with the account Chad sets up for you (see the accounts table in Section 5). This opens TinaCMS, a plain editing screen — no code, no layout to break.

What you can change

Section	What you can edit
Homepage	The main headline, the intro paragraph, and the three trust points beneath it.
Mama's Golden Hour	Cohort dates, time, price, capacity, and an Enrolling on/off switch that swaps in a "this cohort is full" notice automatically.
Practice details	Phone number, email, which insurers are listed, the footer blurb, and your Instagram / Psychology Today links.
FAQ	Add, remove, reorder, and edit any question and answer.
Journal (blog)	Write new posts, edit existing ones, and a real Published switch — flip a post to unpublished and the page stops existing on the site entirely, it isn't just hidden.

Every edit you make through /admin is saved automatically to the site's history and goes live within about a minute — you'll see a small "publishing" indicator while it does. There's no way to accidentally break the layout, fonts, or colors from inside the editor — that boundary was built in on purpose so you can edit freely.

What Tina can't do

It only edits the words listed above. Adding a whole new page, changing colors or layout, or anything structural is a request to Chad, not a /admin task.

How your contact form works

When someone submits the form on your Contact page, two emails go out automatically: a notification to you at goldenhourwellco@gmail.com with everything they entered, and a confirmation to them letting them know you'll be in touch within one business day.

A deliberate limitation — please read

The form is intentionally not a clinical intake form. It asks for contact details and a general reason for reaching out, but the message box is capped at 300 characters and visitors are told directly not to include health information. This is because the form sends through Gmail, and standard Gmail does not carry the HIPAA Business Associate Agreement (BAA) that's required before any protected health information can pass through an email system.

In plain terms: it's built to be safe by design, but if you want to eventually accept real clinical intake through the website, that requires upgrading to Google Workspace with a signed BAA (roughly $6/user/month). Worth deciding on your own timeline — not urgent, just worth knowing.

Accounts and access

Here is every account involved in running the site, in plain language. Chad holds developer access to all of these as your web contact; ask him for login details on anything you need to access directly.

Account	Login	What it's for
Domain registration	Squarespace account (account.squarespace.com)	Owns goldenhourwellnesscolorado.com. Registrant on file: Shayla Martinez-O'Brien. Renews April 2027, auto-renew on.
Website email	goldenhourwellco@gmail.com (Google Workspace)	Your practice inbox — unaffected by the website move.
GitHub	github.com/ghwco/ghwco	Source code and full edit history of the site.
Cloudflare	Controlled via her Google account (GHWCO2026@gmail.com)	Hosts the live site and manages the domain's DNS and SSL certificate.
TinaCMS	app.tina.io, project "Golden Hour Wellness Colorado"	Powers the /admin editor. Chad adds you as a user here.
EmailJS	dashboard.emailjs.com	Delivers the contact form. Registered under Shayla Martinez-O'Brien.
Google Search Console	search.google.com/search-console — controlled via her Google account (GHWCO2026@gmail.com)	Shows how the site performs in Google search — what people search to find you, and any indexing issues.
Google Analytics	analytics.google.com — controlled via her Google account (GHWCO2026@gmail.com)	Tracks visits, which pages people look at, and how they found the site.
Acuity Scheduling	Existing Acuity account	Your booking calendar — unchanged, embedded on the homepage.
Thrizer	Existing Thrizer account	Your insurance benefits checker — unchanged, embedded on the Contact/Services pages.

A note on passwords

This document intentionally does not contain any passwords. Chad will share credentials directly and securely for any account you need to log into yourself.

Getting found — SEO and growth

The technical groundwork for search visibility is already done: every page has a unique title and description, structured data that helps Google understand you're a licensed therapy practice, fast load times, and mobile-friendly design throughout. Google Search Console and Google Analytics are now connected too, and your sitemap — the full list of every page on the site — has already been submitted to Google, so new and updated pages get discovered and indexed faster than if Google had to find them on its own through periodic crawling. That's the foundation. The items below are what actually move the needle on being found — and none of them require touching code.

Do these first — highest impact

- Claim and complete your Google Business Profile (business.google.com) if you haven't already. This is very often the single biggest driver of new local clients — make sure your address, phone, hours and website link are accurate, add photos, and select "Counselor" or "Mental Health Service" as your category.
- Ask a handful of recent clients (where clinically and ethically appropriate) to leave a Google review. A steady trickle of reviews matters more for local search ranking than almost anything else.
- Keep your Psychology Today profile current and linked — it's both a referral source in its own right and a trust signal search engines notice.

Ongoing — keeps momentum

- Publish a Journal (blog) post every month or two through /admin. Fresh, genuine content on topics like EMDR, trauma recovery, or the Mama's Golden Hour group is what search engines reward over time — and it's already wired to generate its own page, sitemap entry, and social preview automatically.
- Keep the Mama's Golden Hour cohort dates and the "Enrolling" toggle current — an out-of-date cohort page reads as an inactive practice to both visitors and Google.
- Local directories and citations — make sure your name, address and phone are identical (down to formatting) anywhere you're listed: Google, Psychology Today, Yelp, Healthgrades, any local Colorado counseling directories.
- Once there's a few weeks of real traffic, ask Chad for a quick look at Search Console and Analytics together — that's where you'll actually see what people search to find you and which pages they spend time on.

If something looks wrong

What you're seeing	Likely cause	What to do
A word or price is wrong on the site	Content, not code	Fix it yourself at /admin, or ask Chad.
The site won't load at all	Hosting or domain issue	Contact Chad — this is the one case that's

What you're seeing	Likely cause	What to do
		time-sensitive.
Contact form isn't emailing you	EmailJS quota or config	Contact Chad. In the meantime your phone number and email are still listed everywhere on the site.
A blog post won't publish	Usually the Published toggle	Check the toggle in /admin first; ask Chad if it still won't show.

Developer contact: Chad Moravec · chad.m.moravec@gmail.com

A few things worth doing soon

None of these are urgent, but they're worth closing out in the next few weeks:

- Read through the new page copy Chad wrote (About, Services, Team, FAQ). About 1,800 words describe how the practice works clinically, and while nothing about credentials or experience was invented, it should get your eyes and sign-off before it's fully indexed by Google.
- Decide on the Google Workspace + BAA question for the contact form (see Section 4) — no rush, just a decision that's yours to make.
- Cancel the old Squarespace website subscription once you've confirmed everything above looks right — Chad will confirm when it's safe to do this without affecting your domain or email, which stay put either way.

Questions? I'm always a text or email away — nothing here is fragile, and anything you change can be un-changed. Congratulations on the new site, it's built to grow with the practice.